Ecological Fibers is a world leader in environmentally-sound covering materials. Since conception in 1972, they have disbanded the use of hazardous solvents in any of their materials, and introduced the revolutionary practice of incorporating water-based, solvent-free coatings into their products. At the time, there were no guidelines for clean production nor any regulations for waste reduction in the industry. Ecological pioneered the way for the coating industry to make this important environmental and technological advancement. For more than 45 years, their Rhode Island coating facility has undergone constant improvements and continues to lead the way in green manufacturing.

By 1990 Ecological Fibers achieved optimal production as a 100% environmentally clean coating operation. For reaching this goal, they were honored with an EPA award, Earth Day Certificate, and are recognized by the Federal government as an innovative supplier of solvent-free covering materials.

As a result derived through this constant pledge towards innovation, they have accumulated over 45 years of experience in clean manufacturing and water-based coating processes, ensuring the health and safety of their employees, customers and the environment. All this, while offering what is among the largest selection of premier cover materials in the world to the book industry, while consistently maintaining optimal production.

This international reach is made possible through relationships that have developed over their more than 45 year history, allowing for enhanced and unmatched international inventory, ensuring easy shipment and transportation of materials for projects spanning every part of the globe. With stocking programs in China, South Korea, India, and more, Ecological Fibers has emerged as a true worldwide leader in both foreign and domestic covering material distribution.
